WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 21, 1867.

Mr. Chase and His Assailants. We have already spoken fully in these columns concerning the recent gratuitous and wholly unwarranted attacks upon the reputation of Chief Justice Chase. The subject derives additional interest from the following allusion to it in a private letter written by Mr. Chase since the charges spoken of were made. He says:-"The article in the World, of New York, is in an excellent spirit, and not far from correct. But I don't want to be represented as particu-larly poor or particularly distinterested. I think I am worth now about one hundred thousand dollars. I should, at any rate, be quite willing to take that sum in 5-20s, and make a clear conveyance of all I have in the world to anybody who will pay my debts. I would willingly be worth a great deal more if I knew of an honest way to get worth more. All that the people are interested in knowing is that I haven't a cent which of right belongs to them I didn't serve them to make money out of them, but to save money for them, and I really feel that the rascals who are slandering me ought to be denounced, and this mean attempt to injure me in the public esteem exposed. It is much more important to the people than it is to me that those who have served them fatthfully shall be fully and generously sustained; otherwise ras-cality will be at a premium, and those who are trying to make them suspect me will run their arms to the shoulders in their money-bags."

A career of distinguished public service, and a character of acknowledged probity in all the walks of life, ought to have shielded such a man as Chief Justice Chase from the assaults of even the most reckless and abaudoned malice. But while they have not done this, they have rendered the public mind proof against the influence of such assaults when made. Outside the ranks of public thieves and plunderers, who naturally fall into the habit of sneering at all possibility of honor or integrity on the part of those in official station, we do not believe that there is a man in the United States who really thinks that the distinguished ex-Secretary of the Treasury prostituted his high office to the ends of private gain. The gratifying and most honorable alacrity with which many prominent Democratic journals have repelled this vile assault upon the Chief Justice, shows that the public mind is still very far from that conditions most ominous of national corruption and decay, when universal suspicion is the rule. It shows that the personal reputation of our distinguished public men is not yet at the mercy of every moral ruffian who may choose to assault them. It is all-important, as Mr. Chase suggests, that the people should generously sustain those who have faithfully served them. The consciousness of appreciation and approval is a reward most grateful to the deserving public servant, and one which he has richly earned. In times like these, when there are so much of fraud and rascality connected with many branches of the public service, the distinction between integrity and venality should be well marked by the people. The corrupt functionary should be made to feel the weight of popular odium, and his ill-gotten gains should only serve to mark him the more deeply for reprobation; while, on the other hand, the faithful and incorruptible officer should enjoy-in addition to that reward which none can deprive him of, the approval of his own conscience—the satisfaction also of the appreciation and honor of his fellowcitizens.

In our own estimation, not the least of the many noble qualities which have instinctively turned the hearts of the people towards Mr. Chase in this crisis of our national life, when, if ever, we have need of a great statesman at the helm of public affairs, is his acknowledged integrity, his inflexible opposition to all schemes of extravagance, and to every species of rascality in connection with the affairs of government. All thoughtful men must feel that one of our greatest dangers arises from the tremendous demoralization, the downright fraud and theft, which have crept into every branch of the public service. This must be speedily checked, or the nation will go to ruin. And we know of nothing that would go so far to check it and to restore honesty and integrity to every department of the Government, as to have at the head of affairs a great statesman and an honest man.

End of the American Legation at Rome. THE Cable gives us the following paragraph:-"ROME, August 20.—The mission of the United States at the Holy See having been discon-tinued, the American Legation in this city is

The information thus conveyed to us will be welcomed by a great majority of the people of the United States. There is a double reason why the legation at Rome should be discontinued. In the first place, there never should have been a Minister there. There is no necessity for such an additional expense. Canton, far larger and more important than the Pontifical States, has only a Consul, and why we should send a Minister was always a cause of surprise. Most of the Protestant powers have only a consular office. Prussia long ago abolished her legation, while Great Britain has not for two and a half cen turies had any diplomatic representative Why, then, should we? We give none to Saxony, or Bohemia, or Cuba; why should we send a Minister Extraordinary to Rome?

But even if the power of the State was sufficient to justify such an honor being paid to it, yet the conduct of the Papal Government emphatically demands that we assert our dignity and our principles, and withdraw our Minister. Despite the denial of General King, there can be but little doubt that the Cardinal had TRIBUNE; BUILDINGS, New York.

ordered the discontinuance of the Protestant Chapel within the walls of the city. By the laws of the Pope, all worship not Roman Catholic has been for centuries forbidden within the precincts of the Holy City. This rule, originating in the Middle Ages, is perfectly consistent with the spirit of the day which saw its birth, but is too far behind the liberal principles of America to be tamely submitted to. Holding as we do the opinion that perfect freedom of consoience is accorded by nature to each man, we do not intend to have our citizens driven beyond the walls of any city in order that they may worship God as they see fit. The storm of indignation provoked by the enforcement of the law against the Scotch Chapel has been the immediate occasion for the correction of a longestablished evil, and the abolition of a useless homage to a spirit so illiberal as to be far beyond the toleration of our people. Holding, as all Americans do, that each man shall worship as his conscience dictates, the closing of the legation at Rome will be approved by our citizens, be they Protestant or Catholic.

Decapitated at Last.

THE blow has at last fallen, and General Sheridan is to fight the Indians, after having reported in person in Washington. The pleasant prelude to entering on his new duties which is afforded him in the prospect of an interview with Mr. Johnson, will doubtless cheer him for the loss of his headquarters at New Orleans. Until yesterday we did not deem that, mad as he was, the President would actually remove an officer for doing his duty in a manner which meets the approval of all of the loyal North. But insane egotism has led Mr. Johnson to once more set up his opinion in opposition to that of all the North, and he blindly rushes to a fate which, for the good of the country, we had hoped to see averted. He has defied Congress, he has disobeyed the spirit of the law in removing Sheridan, and its letter in removing Stanton. The issue is daily forcing itself on the popular mind, that to allow this madman to continue at the head of the Government is cowardly as well as unpatriotic. The call for his impeachment is daily growing louder.

MERITED. - General Sickles sends six men to hard labor in the Penitentiary for three months, and fines them each twenty-five dollars, for brutally whipping a colored girl in South Carolina. These wretches inflicted one hundred and forty-six lashes on the girl. The punishment seems to us by far too light. Such brutality should be rewarded with such condign punishment as to prevent any repetition in the future.

VICTORIOUS .- We are glad to see that in the match yesterday, between the Athletics and Mutual, our townsmen were successful. The game was a close one, and exceedingly well played on both sides. Score, 18 to 16.

IS THE SPERM WHALE DYING OUT?-The amount of oil brought to market has steadily decreased during the past few years, owing, as the whalemen say, to the diminution in the number of whales, and consequent difficulty in securing a full cargo. Some members of the whale family-the sperm whale, for example are, it is said, gradually becoming extinct, and in a few years-ethnologically speaking-a sperm whale will be as rare a sight to the seaman as Melville's "Moby Dick." Meantime, however, right-whaling goes on as briskly as ever, the chief difference being the changes of ground rendered necessary by the retirement of the right-whale further and further from the tracks of navigation. The northern fleet from New Bedford this season numbers one hundred and two vessels—in the Ochotsk, Arctic, and Kodiack seas. Of these seventy-two are in the Arctic, twenty in the Ochotsk, and ten on the Kodiack ground. Nineteen of the fleet are expected to recruit in the fall at San Francisco, and eighty-three at Bonofulu. If the average quantity of oil and bone is taken, there will be between 50,000 and 60,000 barrels of oil and 1,000,000 pounds of bone to ship from Honolulu next November and December to New York

The Great Fire in London.

Cassell's Magazine has an interesting paper on the great fire in London, during the reign of Charles II, two hundred years ago. We quote:very scarce book, written by a good and fervid Nonconformist preacher, who himself saw the fire, describes the horror of that time with the most vivid truthfulness, and with a religious feeling as earnest as it is simple. For forty miles round London there was no darkness for four consecutive nights; the lurid glare of a furnace shone on the downs of Surrey and the hop fields of Kent. The vast deluge of smoke rolled for fifty miles over the adjoining counties. right away across Hertfordshire and Bucking hamshire, Essex, and Berkshire. When the thousands of houses were blazing at once, "the noise, crackling, and thunder" of the impetuous flames, leaping, roaring, and ravening from street to street, was like "a hideous storm," horribly blended with the screams and shricks women and children, the trample of the frightened crowds, the shouts of the engine men, the bursting of exploded houses, intentionally blown up to stop the fire, and the crushing fall of towers and churches. The air was so hot that in places no one could approach the confiagration. The courts of the Exchange were filled with sheets of fire, and the statues of the kings falling at once, the great building itself pre-sently fell, too, with the roar of an earthquake.

"Battle, rattle, rattle," says the Nonconformist preacher writing, before the ruins were cold, "was the noise which the fire struck upon the ear round about, as if there had been a thousand iron chariots beating upon the stones; and if you turned your eye to the opening of the streets where the fire was come, you might see in some places whole streets at once in flames that issued forth as if they had been so many great forges from the opposite windows, which olding together, were united in one great flame throughout the whole street; and then you might see the houses tumble, tumble, tumble tumble from one end of the street to the other with a great crash, leaving the foundation open to the view of the heavens."

At night the great canopy of smoke, reddened by the fire, seemed to cover the whole city with fame: by day the smoke darkened the sun, which, if it did not look forth, resembled a red-hot globe. Wrapped in a dismal shadow, travellers rode for miles beyond London, though the sky, but for the smoke of the burning city. was all the same bright and pure, and of a stain-less summer blue.
